

PlantForm is a modular “free market” live plant distribution system that also serves as street seating, bicycle parking, and a community gathering and gardening space. Designed to be employed around existing tree wells, PlantForm’s primary module supports seed vending machine and removable soil containers to grow seedlings. These containers rest in a plastic frame with drain holes atop layered soil elements and foam filter which filter gray water drainage. Filtered usable water is stored in the detachable cistern for future uses. Secondary modules include a street tree enclosure, public seating, and public bicycle racks. PlantForm’s intent is to create a collaborative hub that enlivens street-level interaction, offering community members and passersby a chance to interact with nature and with one another. Signage would encourage participants to “plant a seed, adopt a plant” – whenever someone takes a container, that person would be expected to plant new seeds in a prepared container to grow a plant for the next person. By offering the community to participate in a shared objective, PlantForm inspires communal responsibility and caretaking on a street level.
